

URBAN EDGE

Laura Brunner, Malinda Fellmann, Ravanna Eshelbom

The "Urban Edge" is located at the edge of the forest next to a path that runs along the edge of the forest. In front of the forest you will find a football field and agricultural land. Inside the forest there's an ecological landscape close to the path, but hidden behind bushes and trees. The forest next to the site consists mostly of coppice with standards being characterized by a lower and higher layer of trees. At the forest edge you will also find younger, fenced groups of trees that are part of the arboretum of the Waldlabor. The Waldlabor is one of many actors in this forest. They use the space for research and education. Another actor is the ETH, who uses it for research as well. Often you will see kindergarten using the spot for their forest days. However, the most important actors are the uses of the paths - joggers, people taking a stroll, bikers and riders. The forest and its surrounding function as a recreation and leisure area for the people from the neighborhood, but as well for those wanting to escape the busy city.

Public Space Behaviourology, ES24 Chair of Architectural Behaviourology